there were about 700 trainees. At the start of the revolt, 500 of these were assigned to various divisional regiments and the remaining 200 trainees were assigned to man the approximately 50 tracked vehicles. When the battalion reassembled on 15 December 1956, an unknown number of new trainees, who were received from the division, were organized into four companies.

25X1

- d. Since 10 December 1956, the 67th Separate Tank Training Battalion was located at Szabadzsallas (N 46-53, E 19-13). It had previously been at Mor (N 47-28, E 18-13); prior to June or July 1955, it had been at Jaszbereny (N 47-30, E 19-56).
- e. The training area of the battalion was at Veszprem (N 47-06, E 17-53).
- f. For the battalion's present location, see paragraph I.d. above.

- h. The battalion commanding officer was Lieutenant Colonel Kalinin (fnu), Armored Branch. He replaced Lieutenant Colonel Milchevskiy (fnu), in late 1956.

- i. The major items of equipment held by the battalion were:

- (1) About 30 T-54 tanks of two types, one of which had a lower rounded turret. Some of both types of these tanks were equipped with stabilizers.
- (2) About 12 to 15 T-34/75 (sic) and T-34/85 tanks.
- (3) Three or four JS-2 and JS-3 tanks.
- (4) Four 122-millimeter self-propelled guns.
- (5) Five or six amphibious tanks. These tanks, which had four-man crews, were armed with a 75-millimeter gun, and were estimated to be 15 to 20 tons in weight. These tanks, which had a maximum surface speed of 50 to 60 kilometers per hour, were powered in the water by a turbine which had no screw. The water entered through side intakes and was expelled from the rear through exhaust ports in some unknown manner.

12. Recent Unit Activity:

a. The 67th Separate Tank Training Battalion was in garrison at Mor when the Hungarian revolt broke out. Of the battalion's 700 trainees, 500 were assigned to various regiments of the 2nd Guards Mechanized Division and the remaining 200 were formed into tank crews which manned the approximately 50 tanks belonging to the battalion. About 20 percent of the battalion remained in Mor to guard the garrison while most of the battalion moved into Budapest to guard the Parliament Building and the Ministry of Defense during the height of the revolt. The chief of staff of the battalion, a major, also remained in Mor. On 10 December 1956, the rear-guard party moved to Szabadszallas, where they were joined on 15 December by the remainder of the battalion.

25X1

no fighting during the revolt

25X1

any indication of reluctance to fight would have led to severe punishment.

25X1

- b. there were good relations between the Hungarian people and the Soviet troops prior to the outbreak of the revolt. language was an effective barrier to even better relations. only one Soviet enlisted man killed during the fighting and one officer who lost a leg during the fighting. The unit was in constant alert status at Mor during the revolt. The men slept fully clothed and took off only their boots. The garrison guard at Mor was increased from one to ten; four T-34 tanks, which were not battle-ready but could patrol, were also added. However, there were no incidents with the Hungarian people and in December 1956, all excess small arms ammunition taken by the Soviet soldiers was turned in.
